Baboo Jabberjee B.A.

Another delightful example of an English writer poking fun at his countrymen, or maybe all races reactions to someone from a diferent background. A series of adventures of a well educated foreigner in London which originally appeared weekly in the Punch , sometimes with illustrations, dealing with the difficulties of fully understanding a different culture.

The hero's perfect English reminds one of a quote from "My Fair Lady" "His English is too good he said , that clearly indicates that he is Foreign Whereas other people are instructed in their native language English people are'n"
